Carter protested once more against the injustice of the cashier's suspicions and then left the room. At the street door he met Annie, who was waiting for him. "Oh, Robert," she exclaimed in la low voice, "tell me wifit has happened." "Somebody at the office has forged a check for three thousand pounds and more," he replied. "It had been taken from your father's book, and—and—he fancies I took it—I, who had nothing to do with his safe whatever." th his safe whatever."
"And do they imagine it was—"

But, he thinks I am the thief. You don't, Annie?"
"No, Hobert; I am very sure of that.
Only, I can't see you so long as my faer—" Robert's only answer to this was a sigh, ad with a hurried good-by, the lovers . .

Weeks and months went By, and the mystery of the forged check remained unsolved. Livesey insisted that the firm should bear the loss of the £3,000, which Mr. Mason thought the bank ought to repay, as they were legally responsible for the money.

Mr. Mason thought the bank ought to reput, asi they were legally responsible for the money.

"No," said the old gentlefiam, "they may be legally responsible, but I don't see that they ought to stifler. The check itself was in our lands, and we allowed a thirst to get hold of it. The bank did alt they could. The forged signature is so like yours that no one could tell the difference; and the bank cashier teds me that the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed it showed him letters addressed to himself as Moseph Beckman (the man who eashed to the the the known we had done so. No other bank would keep our account."

Of course poor Matter Crump could not find another situation, though he would have been glad to take the lowest place in an office. The wolf came to his door in carnest. Annie, who had a situation in a Roard School, was the chief support of the family; and the poor girl was pale and thin from lolg hours and scanty meals. It was about Eve months after the day when the cashier was dismissed in diagrace that one day Mr. Mason left his office at half-past one, his usual hour for going out to half an hour; and Mr. Mason had hardly had time to reach the street when the young man left his desk, went into Mr. Mason's noom, entried a small closet in which a wash-hand basin was fitted up, and proceeded to wash his hands. This was a high misdemeanor, especially as accommodation was provided for clerks in another part of the building, but Mr. Roson's closet, and always used it when he had a chance of doing so.

dred, or I'll sp.it. What's one seventy-two out of three thousand? I had all the risk, and you—""Silence—will, you?" hissed out Mr. Mason, in an angry whisper. "I can't give you a hundred pounds, for I haven't got it. But I will give you fifty now, and lifty next month. After that you can split if you like, for you shall get no more out of me. I Anything would be better than living as slave to a man like you." "Ifand over "fifty; then," said the other after a pause; and then there was a slight rustle of bank-notes.

"You had better leave the country," said Mr. Mason in a low tone. "The bank eashier who cas red the check might meet you in the street." "I'll take care of that," replied the stranger; and after a few more words had passed the two men left the office.

All this time Carter had been standing half paralyzed, first by fear of discovery and then by astonishment. But he understood this much that this stranger was the man who had eashed the forged check under the name of Beckman; that Mr. Mason knew it, and so far from denouncing him to the police was giving him money to hold his tongue. Yes; and more than this, the stranger was threatening to "split" upon Mr. Mason!

What it could all mean Carter could not comprehend; but he saw one thing plainly enough. The important point was to find out who this min was, and where he lived. In a moment Carter ran out of the room, selzed his hat, and rushed down stairs.

He was just in time. Mr. Mason was leaving the foot of the stairs, going up the street, while a jwell-dressed man, who had evidently just parted from him, was walking rapidly in the opposite direction. Carter followed the stranger to the Mansion House, and saw him take a Bayswater omnibus. This suited Carter exactly.—He went round to the front of the vehicle and got up beside the driver. Then he claimbered along the roof and sented himself above the roof.

"Ah!" said Carter to himself, "I have you now!" you now!"

He waited a few moments, and then 67 and 69 Broa St., Bangor knocked at the door.

It was answered by a diry, sip-shod girl. "Does Mr. Williamson I've here?" in-

Mr. Mason had already closed the double doors which led from his room to the outer office, and Carter was sqrewing up his courage to the point of confessing his presence, when the first words spoken by the stranger fell upon his ear, and made him stand as still as a stone.
